In one realm, in a certain kingdom, there lived forest gnomes. All day long they worked, humming little songs. The Gnome Kingdom was ruled by the eldest gnome, Ruel. Ruel had a daughter, Princess Rhea, who was responsible for all sorts of magical things.

The gnomes had their own workshop where they crafted high-quality shoes. These shoes were exported to the Kingdom of Humans.

They also had their own hospital, where the chief doctor was an elf named Joy. Joy was in love with Princess Rhea, and she loved him in return.

Under Ruel's rule, the Gnome Kingdom flourished. He was a fair and wise ruler. He organized the construction of a school where various sciences were taught, including magic. A theater was also built, where different performances were held. On weekends, the theater was packed. All forest creatures came there, and sometimes even humans wandered in.

Rhea had a friend, a young squirrel named Sabriqus. I've already told you about him. Our Sabriqus was a master baker and a talented musician.
